The title refers to the central theme of the story—the idea that hunting humans is the most dangerous game of all. It highlights the moral and ethical dilemma faced by Zaroff, who considers humans the most challenging prey due to their intelligence and reasoning. The phrase underscores the story's critique of hunting for sport, emphasizing the danger and moral depravity involved when humans become the hunted. It also foreshadows the suspense and peril that Rainsford faces, positioning the game as the ultimate challenge.

2. Why does Zaroff say he hunts humans instead of animals?

3. How does Rainsford's attitude toward hunting change throughout the story?

Answer:

Initially, Rainsford is portrayed as a traditional hunter who enjoys the thrill of the chase, viewing hunting as a sport. He believes in the right to hunt animals for sport and sees it as a test of skill. However, after becoming the hunted himself and experiencing the fear and desperation of being prey, his perspective shifts. He begins to understand the terror and moral implications of Zaroff's game. By the end, Rainsford's attitude is more empathetic; he recognizes the brutality of Zaroff's pursuits and his own complicity in hunting. This transformation underscores a key theme: the moral ambiguity of hunting and the importance of empathy.

4. Describe the character of General Zaroff. What are his motivations and personality traits?

Answer:

Zaroff is depicted as a cultured, intelligent, and refined man, with a love for art, music, and literature. Despite his sophistication, he harbors a dark obsession—hunting humans for sport. 5. What role does Ivan play in the story?

Answer:

Ivan serves as Zaroff's loyal assistant. He is mute, physically strong, and obedient, representing Zaroff's brutal side. It also emphasizes empathy, as Rainsford's experience transforms his perspective, advocating for respect for life and the recognition of shared humanity.
